Petition for Retroactive Waiver of 47 C.F.R.

CG Docket No. 02-278

CG Docket No. 05-338

PETITION FOR RETROACTIVE WAIVER

Petitioner Fetch, Inc. d/b/a Petplan (“Petplan” or “Petitioner”), by and through its undersigned counsel and pursuant to the Order issued by the Federal Communications Commission (the “Commission”) on October 30, 2014, in Docket Nos. 02-278 and 05-338,¹ and Section 1.3 of the Commission’s Rules (the “Rules”),² hereby respectfully requests that the Commission grant a retroactive waiver of Section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) (the “Regulation”) of its Rules³ with respect to the opt-out notice requirement for solicited facsimile advertisements sent to recipients by or purportedly on behalf of Petitioner.

I. Background

The Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991 (“TCPA”),⁴ as amended by the Junk Fax Prevention Act of 2005 (“JFPA”),⁵ prohibits the dissemination of most unsolicited facsimile advertisements. The statute bars the transmission of fax advertisements that are sent without the recipients' prior express consent or permission.⁶ The TCPA provides an exception to this prohibition for unsolicited fax advertisements that are sent to recipients with "Established Business Relationships" with the senders, provided the fax advertisements set forth opt-out notices that satisfy certain statutory specifications and that comply with other requirements.⁷

In its Regulation, the Commission purports to mandate the very same opt-out notices on solicited faxes.⁸ It does so irrespective of the express language of the statutory prohibition, which authorizes the Commission to regulate "unsolicited advertisements," 47 U.S.C. § 227(b) (emphasis added), which the plain language of the TCPA defines as excluding faxes sent with the recipients' "prior express invitation or permission, in writing or otherwise."⁹

On October 30, 2014, the Commission released its Order resolving several petitions pending before it that sought relief from the Regulation, granting retroactive waivers of the Regulation to certain petitioners and inviting parties similarly situated to those petitioners to seek similar waiver relief. On August 28, 2015, the Commission granted 117 petitions for waiver of the Regulation filed by parties similarly situated to the original petitioners.¹⁰ Petplan is similarly situated to the original parties granted relief in the October 30 Order (as well as the petitioners in the August 28 Order). Petitioner therefore respectfully submits this Petition for Retroactive Waiver (this "Waiver Petition") pursuant to the Commission's October 30 Order.

II. The Commission's October 30 Order

As noted above, the Commission released its Order on October 30, 2014. The Order sets forth that opt-out notices are required on all fax advertisements. The Commission specifically stated that all fax advertisements must comply with the rules set forth in its 2006 Order¹¹ (the “Junk Fax Order”), regardless of whether the fax advertisements at issue were solicited by their respective recipients.¹²

Importantly, in its Order, the Commission also granted retroactive waivers of the solicited fax opt-out notice requirement to the petitioners to provide “temporary relief from any past obligation to provide the opt-out notice to such recipients required by [the Commission’s] rules.”¹³ The Commission held that good cause existed to grant these waivers based on the reasonable and significant confusion caused by conflicting language set forth within its Junk Fax Order. The Order stated, in relevant part, as follows:

The record indicates that inconsistency between a footnote contained in the Junk Fax Order and the rule caused confusion or misplaced confidence regarding the applicability of this requirement to faxes sent to those recipients who provided prior express permission.

Further, some commenters question whether the Commission provided adequate notice of its intent to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv). Although we find the notice adequate to satisfy the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, we acknowledge that the notice provided did not make explicit that the Commission contemplated an opt-out requirement on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient.¹⁴

¹² See Ex. A, October 30 Order, ¶ 1.

¹⁴ Id. ¶¶ 24-25 (footnotes omitted)

The Commission expressly acknowledged that inconsistencies between the Junk Fax Order footnote and the Regulation created confusion and a misimpression by some parties that the opt-out notice requirement did not apply to solicited fax advertisements and the resulting “confusion or misplaced confidence, in turn, left some businesses potentially subject to significant damage awards under the TCPA’s private right of action or possible Commission enforcement.”¹⁵ Given these circumstances, the Commission held that granting retroactive waivers for solicited fax advertisements would advance the public interest and that “the TCPA’s legislative history makes clear [its] responsibility to balance legitimate business and consumer interests.”¹⁶

The basis for Petplan’s Waiver Petition is the Commission’s ruling in the Order that it would waive the rule for other parties similarly situated to those that received express retroactive waivers pursuant to the Order.¹⁷ Specifically, the Commission encouraged similarly situated parties to submit requests for waivers and acknowledged that “all future waiver requests will be adjudicated on a case-by-case basis and [the Commission does] not prejudge the outcome of future waiver requests in this Order.”¹⁸ The Commission urged parties to “make every effort to file within six months” of the October 30, 2014 Order but significantly did not impose a cut off date or strict deadline.

Significantly, Petplan had no cause to file such a petition for retroactive waiver with the Commission pursuant to the Order until it was very recently sued in a putative nationwide class action asserting that two faxes allegedly constituting advertisements were transmitted to the named plaintiff well over three years ago (in January and February 2012), allegedly in violation of the TCPA. Prior to that time, Petplan, a small start-up venture, had no basis upon which to believe there was any question regarding the legality of any solicited fax messages sent by or on behalf of Petplan. Promptly after the class action complaint was filed, Petplan retained counsel, and thereafter filed this Waiver Petition. Given these facts, the Waiver Petition is timely. In any event, the Commission subsequently granted waiver requests for petitioners who filed their petitions after April 30, 2015 seeking a waiver of the Regulation as to faxes sent prior to April 30, 2015 because “granting waivers to these parties does not contradict the purpose or intent of the [October 30 Order] as the parties involved are similarly situated to the initial waiver recipients.”¹⁹ Such is the case here.

III. Petitioner is Similarly Situated to Parties Previously Granted Waivers and Should Also Receive a Waiver Pursuant to the Commission’s October 30, 2014 Order

Petitioner respectfully requests that the Commission grant it a retroactive waiver of the Regulation for any solicited fax advertisements transmitted by it prior to April 30, 2015. The Commission should grant a waiver in this instance because of the special circumstances it acknowledged in the October 30 Order (and confirmed in the August 28 Order) and because this relief would not threaten the statute’s purpose of curtailing unwanted faxes and would serve the public interest as detailed below. Further, Petplan is unequivocally similarly situated to the parties that were granted waivers by the Commission in the October 30 Order and August 28 Order.

¹⁹ See Ex. B, August 28 Order, ¶ 20.

As noted above, on October 23, 2015, Petitioner was named as a defendant in a putative nationwide class action alleging violations of the TCPA filed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois.²⁰ This lawsuit was filed by Brian Wanca of Anderson + Wanca—a law firm that has filed a barrage of fax-based TCPA putative nationwide class action lawsuits in state and federal courts throughout the country.

Plaintiff in the Fauley Action asserts a claim under the TCPA (as amended by the Junk Fax Prevention Act of 2005) on the alleged basis that two Petplan faxes were disseminated to the named plaintiff over three years ago (in January and February 2012) and alleges, inter alia, that Petitioner and another entity are liable to it under the TCPA because those facsimiles did not display proper opt-out notices. Plaintiff claims that these alleged facsimile advertisements purportedly from Petplan were not sent with express invitation or permission and seeks to represent a putative nationwide class of recipients of such faxes.²¹ As the proposed putative class definition makes plain, Plaintiff claims that the two faxes at issue constitute advertisements (which is disputed by Petplan) and that these faxes did not contain compliant opt-out notices.

²⁰ See Fauley v. Fetch, Inc. d/b/a Petplan, et al., No. 1:15-cv-09406 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 23, 2015) (the “Fauley Action”).

²¹ The parties in the Fauley Action also dispute, among other things, whether the faxes at issue were solicited. However, the Commission need not consider that dispute in acting on this Waiver Petition, as the Commission has asserted that granting a retroactive waiver should not “be construed in any way to confirm or deny whether these petitioners, in fact, had the prior express permission of the recipients to be sent the faxes at issue in the private rights of action.” See Ex. A, October 30 Order, ¶ 31. The Commission has also stated that, regarding some of the petitioners that were granted express retroactive waivers pursuant to the Order, the record in the underlying litigation indicated “that whether some of the petitioners had acquired prior express permission of the recipient remains a source of dispute between the parties.” Id. at ¶ 31 n.104. The two issues – whether a waiver should be granted and whether the waiver applies to any particular fax – are distinct. Whether a recipient consented to receive Petplan’s fax(es) is a factual determination to be properly decided by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, before which the Fauley Action is presently pending. See Ex. B, August 28 Order, ¶ 17.

Accordingly, Petitioner is similarly situated to the parties that were granted express retroactive waivers pursuant to the October 30 Order.

Prior to learning of the instant lawsuit regarding facsimiles allegedly sent well over three years ago and retaining counsel, Petitioner did not have any understanding that opt-out notices were required on solicited faxes. Thus, without a waiver from the Commission, Petplan – like the other parties that were granted waivers or that have petitions presently pending with the Commission – would be potentially subject to substantial liability based on application of a provision of the Junk Fax Order over which the Commission has recognized there was significant and reasonable confusion.

The Commission has the authority to waive any of its rules upon a showing of good cause.²² The Commission has articulated that it may provide a waiver in cases where “special circumstances” exist, the relief provided would not undermine the rule, and the waiver would “better serve the public interest than would application of the rule.”²³ That is unequivocally the case here.

The stated purpose of 47 C.F.R § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) is to allow consumers to stop unwanted faxes.²⁴ Granting a waiver to Petplan pursuant to the October 30 Order would satisfy the Commission’s requirements and rationales for waivers. In the instant case, special circumstances justify departing from the Commission’s rules due to the wide-spread confusion amongst affected parties regarding whether the opt-out requirements applied to solicited faxes.²⁵ The “combination of factors (the lack of explicit requirement in the Commission’s Notice of Proposed Rulemaking and the contradictory language in the Commission’s order implementing the Junk Fax Prevention Act) presumptively establishes good cause for retroactive waiver” of the Regulation.²⁶ Furthermore, by granting a waiver to Petplan, the Commission would be offering relief that is wholly consistent with the purpose of the Regulation and that would further the public interest more than a strict application of the rule.

²² See 47 C.F.R. § 1.3.

²³ Ex. A, October 30 Order, ¶ 23 Ex. B., August 28 Order, ¶ 14; see also 47 C.F.R. § 1.925(b)(3)(i)-(ii) (“The Commission may grant a request for waiver if it is shown that: The underlying purpose of the rule(s) would not be served or would be frustrated by application to the instant case, and that a grant of the requested waiver would be in the public interest; or [i]n view of unique or unusual factual circumstances of the instant case, application of the rule(s) would be inequitable, unduly burdensome or contrary to the public interest. . . .”).

²⁴ See Junk Fax Prevention Act of 2005, ¶ 48, Pub. L. No. 109-21, 119 Stat. 359 (2005) (codified at 47 U.S.C. §227).

Significantly, the public interest would not be advanced by denying Petitioner’s request for a retroactive waiver. The Commission expressly acknowledged in its October 30 Order that the public interest favors offering relief to parties subject to substantial potential exposure in litigation based on an objectively confusing circumstances. Specifically, as the Commission is aware, the October 30 Order states, in relevant part, as follows:

The record in this proceeding demonstrates that a failure to comply with the rule - which as noted above could be the result of reasonable confusion or misplaced confidence - could subject parties to potentially substantial damages This confusion or misplaced confidence, in turn, left some businesses potentially subject to significant damage awards under the TCPA’s private right of action or possible Commission enforcement. We acknowledge that there is an offsetting public interest to consumers through the private right of action to obtain damages to defray the cost imposed on them by unwanted fax ads. On balance, however, we find it serves the public interest in this instance to grant a retroactive waiver to ensure that any such confusion did not result in inadvertent violations of this requirement while retaining the protections afforded by the rule going forward.²⁷

²⁵ See Ex. A, October 30 Order, ¶¶ 24-25.

²⁶ Id. ¶ 24 ;see also Ex. B, August 28 Order, ¶ 15 (“[P]etitioners referencing the confusion between the footnote and the rules are entitled to a presumption of confusion or misplaced confidence.”)

²⁷ Ex. A, October 30 Order, ¶ 27 (footnotes omitted).

Petitioner recognizes the importance of compliance with the Commission's rules and will continue its efforts to ensure compliance with the TCPA and related rules.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, Petitioner respectfully requests that the Federal Communications Commission grant this Waiver Petition and the request for a retroactive waiver for Petitioner from liability under 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv).

Adopted: October 15, 2014

Released: October 30, 2014

By the Commission: Commissioners Pai and O'Rielly concurring in part, dissenting in part and issuing separate statements.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. In this Order, we confirm senders of fax ads must include certain information on the fax that will allow consumers to opt out, even if they previously agreed to receive fax ads from such senders.¹ At the same time, we recognize that some parties who have sent fax ads with the recipient's prior express permission may have reasonably been uncertain about whether our requirement for opt-out notices applied to them. As such, we grant retroactive waivers of our opt-out requirement to certain fax advertisement senders to provide these parties with temporary relief from any past obligation to provide the opt-out notice to such recipients required by our rules.

2. In addition, we provide a six-month window for these waiver recipients to come into compliance with the opt-out requirement, and we direct the Consumer and Governmental Affairs Bureau (Bureau) to conduct outreach to inform senders of the opt-out notice requirement. After this six-month window, we emphasize that all waiver recipients must include the opt-out notice in the precise manner required by our rules.² Other, similarly situated parties may also seek waivers such as those granted in this Order. But in light of our confirmation here that a fax ad sent with the recipient's prior express permission must include an opt-out notice, we expect that parties will make every effort to file within six months of the release of this Order.

² This waiver does not extend to a similar requirement to include an opt-out notice on fax ads sent pursuant to an established business relationship, as there is no confusion regarding the applicability of this requirement to such faxes. See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iii). We also note that this waiver does not affect the prohibition against sending unsolicited fax ads, which has remained in effect since its original effective date. See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4).

3. We also deny an Application for Review³ and several related requests for declaratory ruling⁴ insofar as they seek a ruling that the Commission lacked the statutory authority to require opt-out information on fax ads sent with a consumer's prior express permission, or, alternatively, that section

As discussed in greater detail below, other, similarly situated parties may also seek waivers such as those granted in this Order.

227(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (the Act), was not the statutory basis of that requirement.⁵

II. BACKGROUND

A. Telephone Consumer Protection Act

4. In 1991, Congress enacted the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) to address the growing number of telephone marketing calls and certain calling practices thought to be an invasion of consumer privacy.⁶ In relevant part, the TCPA prohibits the use of any telephone facsimile (fax) machine, computer, or other device to send an “unsolicited advertisement” to a telephone fax machine.⁷ In 1992, the Commission adopted rules implementing the TCPA, including restrictions on the transmission of unsolicited fax ads by fax machines.⁸

5. In 2005, Congress enacted the Junk Fax Prevention Act, which amended the fax advertising provisions of the TCPA.⁹ In general, the Junk Fax Prevention Act: (1) codified an established business relationship (EBR) exemption to the prohibition on sending unsolicited fax ads;¹⁰ (2) provided a definition of an EBR to be used in the context of unsolicited fax ads;¹¹ (3) required the sender of an unsolicited fax advertisement to provide specified notice and contact information on the fax that allows recipients to “opt out” of any future fax transmissions from the sender;¹² and (4) specified the circumstances under which a request to “opt out” complies with the Act.¹³ In 2006, the Commission adopted the Junk Fax Order amending the rules concerning fax transmissions as required by the Junk Fax Prevention Act and addressing certain issues raised in petitions for reconsideration concerning the Commission’s fax advertising rules.¹⁴ As part of that Order, the Commission adopted a rule that required that a fax advertisement “sent to a recipient that has provided prior express invitation or permission to the sender must include an opt-out notice.”¹⁵ A summary of the Junk Fax Order was published in the Federal Register on May 3, 2006.¹⁶

⁶ The TCPA is codified as section 227 of the Act, 47 U.S.C. § 227.

⁷ 47 U.S.C. § 227(b)(1)(C). As the legislative history explained, because fax machines “are designed to accept, process, and print all messages which arrive over their dedicated lines,” fax advertising imposes burdens on unwilling recipients that are distinct from the burdens imposed by other types of advertising. See H.R. B. Anda Proceeding

6. Petition for Declaratory Ruling. In 2010, Anda, Inc. (Anda) filed a request for declaratory ruling on the opt-out rule as applied to fax ads sent to recipients that had provided prior express permission.¹⁷ Specifically, Anda sought a ruling that: (1) the Commission lacked any authority to adopt a rule requiring an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the recipient's express prior consent; or (2) in the alternative, section 227(b) of the Act is not the statutory basis for the rule.¹⁸ In particular, Anda contended that section 227 authorizes the Commission to adopt restrictions only with respect to unsolicited fax ads, which are defined to exclude any fax advertisement sent with the recipient's prior express invitation or permission.¹⁹ Anda requested this clarification because section 227(b)(3) creates a private right of action that permits suits in state courts based on a violation of section 227(b) or the regulations prescribed under that subsection.²⁰ Anda represents that it is subject to such a lawsuit in which a class of plaintiffs seeks monetary damages under section 227(b) for alleged violations of the opt-out notice requirement for faxes allegedly sent at the request of the recipient.²¹

7. In 2012, the Bureau dismissed Anda's petition.²² In so doing, the Bureau concluded that Anda had identified no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove, a condition precedent to the Commission issuing a declaratory ruling.²³ Specifically, the Bureau responded that the Commission had cited in the Junk Fax Order statutory authority, including section 227, to adopt the rule at issue.²⁴ The Bureau also found that the Commission had clearly set forth the rule's requirement.²⁵ The Bureau thus found no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove.

8. The Bureau also concluded that, to the extent Anda challenged the Commission's authority to adopt the rule itself, it was an improper collateral challenge to the rule that should have been presented in a timely petition for reconsideration and was time-barred under the Act and the Commission's procedural rules.²⁶ While the Bureau dismissed Anda's petition on procedural grounds, the Bureau in dicta found unpersuasive Anda's argument that the TCPA could not have given the Commission authority to adopt the rule.²⁷ Specifically, the Bureau noted that the opt-out requirement was tied directly to the TCPA's purpose in ensuring that consumers have the necessary information to opt out of future unwanted fax ads, and in ensuring that the fax sender can account for all such requests and process them in a timely manner by making certain the recipient uses the contact information specified by the sender in the opt-out notice.²⁸

9. Application for Review. On May 14, 2012, Anda filed an Application for Review of the Bureau Order dismissing its Petition for Declaratory Ruling. Specifically, Anda contends that the Bureau erred in determining that there is no uncertainty to remove and that the Commission should clarify that the opt-out notice requirement for faxes sent with prior express permission was not adopted pursuant to section 227(b) of the Act.²⁹ In so doing, Anda reiterates arguments made in the petition for declaratory ruling. First, Anda argues that the courts are unclear as to which statutory authority the Commission relied upon in adopting the opt-out requirement for fax ads because the Commission cited multiple authorities in the Junk Fax Order without specifying which formed the legal basis for this requirement.³⁰ Second, Anda contends that section 227 contains no express language authorizing the Commission to adopt rules regarding faxes sent with the recipient's prior express permission.³¹ In this regard, Anda takes issue with the Bureau's conclusion that because Congress did not define how "prior express invitation or permission" can be obtained from, and revoked by, a consumer, the Commission has authority to fill gaps where the statute is silent on specific terms.³²

C. Petitions for Declaratory Ruling, Waiver and/or Rulemaking

10. Since the filing of Anda's Application for Review, multiple petitions have been filed seeking various forms of relief from the Commission's rule requiring that an opt-out notice be included on fax ads sent with the prior express invitation or permission of the recipient. In general, these petitioners contend there is controversy and uncertainty over the scope of and statutory basis for section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission's rules.³³ The petitioners seek a declaratory ruling to clarify that section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) was not promulgated under section 227 of the Act.³⁴ The petitioners argue that section 227(b) of the Act applies only to "unsolicited" ads and that the Commission did not have the authority to require the opt-out notification on faxes sent with the prior permission of the recipient.³⁵ As a result, these petitioners suggest that clarification is necessary to determine whether the rule is meant to require opt-out notices on faxes sent with the prior express permission of the recipient and, if so, the statutory basis for that rule.³⁶ Several petitioners contend that the Commission offered confusing and conflicting statements regarding the applicability of the rule to solicited faxes.³⁷ In addition, several petitions seek a declaratory ruling that a fax advertisement that "complies substantially" with section for the Eighth Circuit agreed with the FCC's Nack amicus brief that the regulation at issue, by its plain language, required an opt-out notice on a fax advertisements sent with the recipient's express consent. In addition, the Court held that the Hobbs Act, which establishes procedures for judicial review of FCC orders by means of direct review in the court of appeals, provides exclusive process by which to challenge an FCC regulation. See Nack v. Walburg, 715 F.3d 680 (8th Cir. 2013) cert. denied, 134 S.Ct. 1539 (2014).

64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission's rules does not violate any regulation promulgated under the Act, even if the opt-out notice does not conform to the specific requirements of that rule.³⁸

11. All Granite, American, Best Buy, Cannon, CARFAX, Crown Mortgage, Forest, Futuredontics, Gilead, Magna, Masimo, Medica, Merck, Power Liens, Purdue Pharma, Prime Health, S&S, Stericycle, TechHealth, Unique Vacations, UnitedHealth and Walburg seek retroactive waivers of the rule.³⁹ Forest and Gilead state that a waiver “would serve the public interest by avoiding an abuse of the private right of action created by the TCPA.”⁴⁰ Walburg states that a waiver is justified because strict compliance with respect to solicited faxes would be “inequitable, unduly burdensome, and contrary to the public interest.”⁴¹ Purdue Pharma seeks a “limited waiver” for faxes “sent pursuant to the recipients’ prior express invitation or permission . . . each of which included a demonstrably effective opt-out notice on the first page describing cost-free opt-out mechanisms.”⁴² Prime Health maintains that “[w]here, as here, recipients of fax advertisements explicitly agreed to receive them, had the means and ability to revoke their consent at any time, and never expressed any interest or desire to do so, requiring strict compliance with Section 64.1200(a)(3)(iv) would be both tremendously burdensome and inequitable.”⁴³ TechHealth similarly states that it “sent fax advertisements to business partners that had consented to receiving communications from TechHealth” and that “those recipients knew how to reach TechHealth and could have easily requested that TechHealth stop sending faxes. . . . Under such circumstances, the goal of allowing consumers to stop unwanted faxes would not have been furthered by including opt-out notices on the faxes”⁴⁴

12. Finally, Staples requests that the Commission initiate a rulemaking to repeal section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv), arguing that it reflects “poor policy that unfairly threatens companies and individuals with massive liability for the transmission of solicited fax ads” and “plainly exceeds the agency’s statutory authority.”⁴⁵ In addition, several petitioners argue that application of this requirement violates the First Amendment to the extent that it requires solicited faxes to contain an opt-out notice.⁴⁶

13. The Commission sought comment on the issues raised in these petitions.⁴⁷ Some individual consumers and consumer organizations filed comments supporting the Commission's opt-out requirements, noting the importance of having a means to stop the sending of fax ads.⁴⁸ One commenter argues that Congress provided the Commission with authority in section 227(b)(2)(E) to promulgate opt-out requirements through the use of the phrase "future unsolicited fax advertisements" to indicate that Congress was contemplating situations in which, in the past, a recipient may have consented to receiving a fax, but later decides not to continue to consent.⁴⁹ Other commenters support the requests for declaratory ruling.⁵⁰ In general, these parties reiterate arguments made in the Petitions. For example, these commenters challenge the Commission's statutory authority to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) and suggest that section 227 of the Act was not the statutory basis of that rule.⁵¹ These parties also support the granting of a blanket retroactive waiver of this rule for any prior conduct, noting confusion created in the Order adopting this requirement and the liability that several parties face in private rights of action.⁵²

III. DISCUSSION

14. As discussed in greater detail below, we deny Anda's application for review and several related requests for declaratory ruling to the extent that they seek a ruling that the Commission lacked the statutory authority to require opt-out information on fax ads sent with a consumer's prior express permission, or, alternatively, that section 227(b) of the Act was not the statutory basis of that requirement. In so doing, we uphold the Bureau's prior conclusion that there was no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove regarding to the statutory basis of the rule.⁵³ We also find that the Bureau's action to otherwise dismiss the requests as improper collateral challenges time-barred by the Commission's rules was justified insofar as the requests state or suggest that there was no Commission authority for that rule or that section 227 did not provide such authority.⁵⁴ Even if any petitioners had identified a basis to issue a declaratory ruling regarding the statutory authority to adopt the rule requiring an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient, however, we conclude that section 227(b) of the Act, which provides the Commission with authority to prescribe regulations to implement the TCPA's prohibitions on junk faxes, is the statutory basis for that rule.⁵⁵

15. While we affirm that the Commission's rules require that an opt-out notice must be contained on all fax ads, the record indicates that a footnote contained in the Junk Fax Order caused confusion regarding the applicability of this requirement to faxes sent to those recipients who provided prior express permission or created a false sense of confidence that the requirement did not apply. As a result, we find good cause exists to grant individual retroactive waivers of section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission's rules to the extent described below.

A. Application for Review and Requests for Declaratory Ruling

16. We affirm the Bureau's finding that challenges to the Commission's authority to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) made via a request for declaratory ruling constitute an improper collateral challenge to the rule that should have been presented in a timely petition for reconsideration and are now time-barred by the Act and the Commission's rules. Interested parties have avenues to challenge the validity of section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv). First, section 405(a) of the Act and section 1.429(d) of the Commission's rules allow petitions for reconsideration of a Commission rulemaking action to be filed within 30 days of the date of public notice of such action.⁵⁶ The Commission adopted and published in the Federal Register the Junk Fax Order in May 2006.⁵⁷ No petition was filed by Anda or any other party, however, challenging the Commission's authority to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) within the time period required by the Act and the Commission's rules.

17. Anda's challenge to the Commission's authority via a petition for declaratory ruling came over four years after Federal Register publication of the rule and is therefore time-barred. The petitions for declaratory ruling filed in this proceeding requesting similar relief were filed approximately seven or more years after the rule was published in the Federal Register.⁵⁸ Alternatively, at any time after the rule became effective, Anda could have petitioned the Commission to rescind the rule via a petition for rulemaking. Moreover, Anda would have had the opportunity to request judicial review if the Commission had denied its petition for rulemaking or petition for reconsideration of the Junk Fax Order,⁵⁹ or to challenge the Commission's authority to adopt the rule if the Commission sought to enforce

⁵³ We note that the decision to issue a declaratory ruling to terminate controversy or remove uncertainty lies within the Commission's discretion. See 5 U.S.C. § 554(e).

⁵⁴ See Anda Order.

⁵⁵ See 47 U.S.C. § 227(b). Even some commenters who oppose the relevant petitions or requests "encourage the Commission to dispose of any relevant issues raised by Anda or other petitioners in denying the nine instant Petitions," "[d]espite the procedural defects in Anda's filings." the rule against it.⁶⁰ To allow Anda and other parties to challenge the validity of the rule via a request for declaratory ruling years after a rule has been promulgated would effectively circumvent the statutory channels for review of Commission rules.

18. We also affirm the Bureau's conclusion that requests seeking a declaratory ruling that the Commission lacked the statutory authority to require opt-out information on fax ads sent with a consumer's prior express permission, or, alternatively, that section 227 of the Act, was not the statutory basis of that requirement relating to the Commission's present no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove. The Commission clearly relied upon its section 227 authority in promulgating the opt-out notification requirement codified in section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission's rules.⁶¹ As the Bureau noted, the Commission in the Junk Fax Order expressly identified section 227 as one of the statutory bases for section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) and the other rules promulgated in that order.⁶² The Final Regulatory Flexibility Statement accompanying the Junk Fax Order likewise reiterated that the Commission adopted section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) and the other rules adopted in the Junk Fax Order "to comply with Congress' mandate for the Commission to issue regulations implementing the [JFPA]," i.e., the section 227 amendments.⁶³ And a Public Notice announcing the effective date of those rules specifically cited the Junk Fax Prevention Act as the source of the agency's authority to enact the regulations.⁶⁴

19. More specifically, we conclude that the Commission had authority to adopt the rule in question here. As a threshold matter, section 227(b)(2) grants the Commission authority "to prescribe regulations to implement the requirements of [the TCPA's fax advertisement provisions]."⁶⁵ Further, section 227(a)(5) defines an unsolicited advertisement as certain advertising material "transmitted to any person without that person's prior express invitation or permission."⁶⁶ The phrase "prior express invitation or permission," however, was not defined by Congress. As a result, in order to prescribe whether a fax ad is unsolicited under the TCPA, and thus subject to the restrictions in section 227(b)(1)(C) and the Commission's implementation rules, the Commission defined the scope of such prior express permission.⁶⁷ Specifically, the Commission held that "express permission need only be secured once from the consumer in order to send fax advertisements to that recipient until the consumer revokes such permission by sending an opt-out request to the sender."⁶⁸ As a result, under the Commission's implementation of section 227(a)(5) and 227(b)(1)(C), prior express permission remains in place only if it has not been subsequently revoked by the recipient.

20. Necessary to the determination as to whether the sender of a fax advertisement retains the recipient's prior express permission at the time after the initial fax advertisement is sent is whether the recipient has exercised the right to opt out of future fax ads. A means to revoke such prior express permission is, therefore, important to determine whether prior express permission remains in place. Some fax recipients, after initially consenting to receive fax ads, will decide they no longer wish to receive future faxes because, for example, they have found another vendor they prefer or no longer need the product or service being advertised – and petitioners do not contend otherwise. The record here confirms that, absent a requirement to include an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with prior express permission, recipients could be confronted with a practical inability to make senders aware that their consent is revoked.⁶⁹ At best, this could require such consumers to take, potentially, considerable time and effort to determine how to properly opt out, which would place the burden on the consumer to find an effective means to revoke such consent, assuming that such a means even exists.⁷⁰ At worst, it would effectively lock in their consent at a point where they no longer wish to receive such faxes.⁷¹ The opt-out notice requirement ensures that the recipient has the necessary contact information to opt out of future fax ads and can do so in a timely, efficient and cost-free manner,⁷² specifically tied to the Commission’s implementation of section 227(b). It also benefits the fax sender by ensuring that opt-out requests are directed to a contact point designated by the fax sender to process such requests.⁷³ Moreover, we find that giving consumers a cost-free, simple way to withdraw previous consent is good policy. As the Bureau noted, in adopting the opt-out notice requirement, the Commission recognized that consumers who have provided prior express permission for the receipt of fax ads might subsequently choose to withdraw that ⁶⁹ See, e.g. Nat’l Ass’n of Consumer Advocates Comments at 2 (“Without such [opt-out] information, a subsequent fax cannot be said to have been ‘unsolicited,’ as opposed to the result of the recipient not knowing or figuring out how to ‘opt out.’”); Bellin & Assoc. Comments at 19 n.8 (absent the opt-out notice rule at issue “only those persons who receive unsolicited advertisements [would] be informed of how to properly opt out of receiving ‘future unsolicited fax advertisements,’ while leaving persons who had previously given permission to receive such fax advertisements in the dark on how to do so.”); Nack Comments at 1 (“At times in the past, if a phone number appeared on the fax advertisement I would call the advertiser to tell them that I did not give permission to be sent the advertising fax and that I wanted them to remove my fax number from their fax list. A number of times the person that answered the phone had no knowledge that the company was even sending out fax advertisements and did not know what procedure to follow to stop getting the fax advertisements, which resulted in failure to have my request honored.”). As Staples/Quill state, “[b]ut for the FCC’s Rule, advertisers would not include such opt-out notices in consensual communications with their customers.” Staples Petition at 11.

consent.⁷⁴ In addition, the Commission has recently adopted an enhanced opt-out notification requirement in another TCPA area – robocalls – to better enable consumers to opt out of future marketing messages, including those to which they previously consented.⁷⁵ Similarly, in its SoundBite decision, the Commission found that allowing texts to consumers confirming a consumer’s desire to withdraw prior consent is sound consumer policy that does not violate the TCPA.⁷⁶

21. Finally, we reject any implication that by addressing the petitions filed in this matter while related litigation is pending, we have “violate[d] the separation of powers vis-à-vis the judiciary,”⁷⁷ as one commenter has suggested. By addressing requests for declaratory ruling and/or waiver, the Commission is interpreting a statute, the TCPA, over which Congress provided us authority as the expert agency.⁷⁸ Likewise, the mere fact that the TCPA allows for private rights of action based on violations of our rules implementing that statute in certain circumstances⁷⁹ does not undercut our authority, as the expert agency, to define the scope of when and how our rules apply.⁸⁰

B. Waiver

22. Although we deny those requests that challenge the Commission’s legal authority to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission’s rules requiring an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient, we find good cause exists to grant a retroactive waiver to the petitioners.⁸¹ For the reasons discussed below, we believe the public interest is better served by granting such a limited retroactive waiver than through strict application of the rule. Other, similarly situated entities likewise may request retroactive waivers from the Commission, as well.

23. The Commission may waive any of its rules for good cause shown.⁸² A waiver may be granted if: (1) special circumstances warrant a deviation from the general rule and (2) the waiver would better serve the public interest than would application of the rule.⁸³

24. We first find that special circumstances warrant deviation from the general rule. Specifically, there are two grounds that we find led to confusion among affected parties (or misplaced confidence that the opt-out notice rule did not apply to fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient), the combination of which present us with special circumstances warranting deviation from the adopted rule. The record indicates that inconsistency between a footnote contained in the Junk Fax Order and the rule caused confusion or misplaced confidence regarding the applicability of this requirement to faxes sent to those recipients who provided prior express permission.⁸⁴ Specifically, the footnote stated that “the opt-out notice requirement only applies to communications that constitute unsolicited advertisements.”⁸⁵ The use of the word “unsolicited” in this one instance may have caused some parties to misconstrue the Commission’s intent to apply the opt-out notice to fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient. We note that all petitioners make reference to the confusing footnote language in the record.⁸⁶

25. Further, some commenters question whether the Commission provided adequate notice of its intent to adopt section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv).⁸⁷ Although we find the notice adequate to satisfy the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act,⁸⁸ we acknowledge that the notice provided did not make explicit that the Commission contemplated an opt-out requirement on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient.⁸⁹ While that requirement was a “logical outgrowth”⁹⁰ of the proposal to impose an opt-out notice requirement on fax ads sent pursuant to an EBR and the interplay of proposed opt-out notice requirements with existing identification requirements required on fax ads, we find that, in combination with the confusion caused by inconsistency in the Junk Fax Order, the lack of explicit notice may have contributed to confusion or misplaced confidence about this requirement.⁹¹

26. We find that this specific combination of factors presumptively establishes good cause for retroactive waiver of the rule. Further, we find nothing in the record here demonstrating that the petitioners understood that they did, in fact, have to comply with the opt-out notice requirement for fax ads sent with prior express permission but nonetheless failed to do so.⁹² We emphasize, however, that simple ignorance of the TCPA or the Commission's attendant regulations is not grounds for waiver. Rather, it is the inconsistent footnote, combined with the other factors explained above, that led to confusion or misplaced confidence on the part of petitioners, and this, along with particular facts and concerns relevant to the public interest at this time (as explained below), warrants deviation from the rule.⁹³

27. Second, we find that granting a retroactive waiver would serve the public interest. The record in this proceeding demonstrates that a failure to comply with the rule – which as noted above could be the result of reasonable confusion or misplaced confidence – could subject parties to potentially substantial damages,⁹⁴ as well as possible liability for forfeitures under the Communications Act. Indeed, we have a duty to “seek out the ‘public interest’ in particular, individualized cases.”⁹⁵ Moreover, the TCPA's legislative history makes clear our responsibility to balance legitimate business and consumer interests.⁹⁶ The lack of explicit notice, though legally adequate, and the ensuing contradictory footnote has, as shown in the record, resulted in a confusing situation for businesses or one that caused businesses mistakenly to believe that the opt-out notice requirement did not apply.⁹⁷ This confusion or misplaced

confidence, in turn, left some businesses potentially subject to significant damage awards under the TCPA's private right of action or possible Commission enforcement.⁹⁸ We acknowledge that there is an offsetting public interest to consumers through the private right of action to obtain damages to defray the cost imposed on them by unwanted fax ads. On balance, however, we find it serves the public interest in this instance to grant a retroactive waiver to ensure that any such confusion did not result in inadvertent violations of this requirement while retaining the protections afforded by the rule going forward.⁹⁹

28. Taken together, the inconsistent footnote in the Junk Fax Order and the lack of explicit notice in the Junk Fax NPRM militates in favor of a limited waiver in this instance. Confusion or misplaced confidence about the rule, however, warrants some relief from its potentially substantial consequences. Thus, to be clear, our finding is not that the risk of substantial liability in private rights of action is, by itself, an inherently adequate ground for waiver, as some commenters note.¹⁰⁰ But we disagree that it cannot be a factor for our consideration, in conjunction with other considerations, like the potential for Commission enforcement, as well. Where we find specific factual circumstances make enforcing the rule unjust or inequitable, we may waive the requirement in the public interest.¹⁰¹ Because we do not waive the rule indefinitely, consumers will not, as a result of our action, be deprived of the rule's value.

29. We emphasize that full compliance with the requirement to provide an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient is expected from waiver recipients six months from the release date of this Order now that any potential for confusion on this point has been addressed and interested parties have been given additional notice of this requirement. We reiterate that the waiver granted herein applies only to the petitioners insofar as they may have failed to comply with section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) prior to six months from the release date of this Order. As a result, the waiver granted herein shall not apply to such conduct that occurs more than six months after the release date of this Order nor shall it apply to any situation other than where the fax sender had obtained the prior express invitation or permission of the recipient to receive the fax advertisement. We direct the Bureau to conduct outreach to inform potential senders of our reconfirmed requirement to include an opt-out on faxes.

30. Other, similarly situated parties, may also seek waivers such as those granted in this Order. Having confirmed the Commission's requirement to provide opt-out notices on fax ads sent with the recipient's prior express permission, however, we expect all fax senders to be aware of and in with this precedent as we uphold the validity of the rule; it merely acknowledges that such inconsistency has resulted in some confusion.

⁹⁸ See, e.g., Best Buy Petition at 5 ("Best Buy is now facing a putative class action lawsuit, alleging millions of damages, a claim for which it has no insurance coverage and no ability to pay"); Futuredontics Petition at 4; Magna Petition at 2 ("now facing a putative class action that threatens to end its 43-year corporate life"); Masimo Petition at 2 ("[i]t is not uncommon for class action lawsuits to seek millions of dollars or more in statutory damages"); Staples Petition at 7.

⁹⁹ We note that the waiver granted herein is limited only to the Commission's rule 64.1200(a)(4)(iv), which requires that a fax ad "sent to a recipient that has provided prior express invitation or permission to the sender must include an opt-out notice that complies with the requirements in [section 64.1200(a)(4)(iii)] of this section." See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv). The waiver does not extend to the similar requirement to include an opt-out notice on fax ads sent pursuant to an established business relationship as there is no confusion regarding the applicability of this requirement to such faxes. See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iii).

¹⁰¹ WAIT Radio, 418 F.2d at 1159 ("...a rule is more likely to be undercut if it does not in some way take into account considerations of hardship, equity, or more effective implementation of overall policy, considerations that an agency cannot realistically ignore, at least on a continuing basis").

compliance with this requirement. We expect parties making similar waiver requests to make every effort to file within six months of the release of this Order.¹⁰²

31. We emphasize that this waiver does not affect the prohibition against sending unsolicited fax ads, which has remained in effect since its original effective date.¹⁰³ Nor should the granting of such waivers be construed in any way to confirm or deny whether these petitioners, in fact, had the prior express permission of the recipients to be sent the faxes at issue in the private rights of action.¹⁰⁴

C. Other Issues

32. Having confirmed the Commission's authority to adopt the requirement to provide opt-out notices on fax ads sent with the recipient's prior express permission and granting a retroactive waiver of this requirement to parties that have been confused by the footnote, we deny the remaining requests contained in the Petitions. First, we deny Staples' request to repeal this rule because of an alleged lack of statutory authority or on First Amendment grounds.¹⁰⁵ The statutory basis and sound policy objectives underlying the opt-out rule have been discussed in detail above in denying a similar request made via a declaratory ruling.¹⁰⁶ We rely on that analysis here and find no further basis to rule differently in response to Staples request.¹⁰⁷ Nor do we find any basis to repeal the rule on First Amendment grounds. We note that the requirement to include an opt-out notice of fax ads survives a First Amendment challenge if it "furthers an important governmental interest that is unrelated to the suppression of free expression and the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedom is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest."¹⁰⁸ As discussed in greater detail above, Congress has expressed a strong governmental interest in protecting consumers from the costs and annoyance of unwanted fax ads.¹⁰⁹ The opt-out notice provides consumers who have given prior express permission to be sent faxes the ability to revoke that permission and have them halted, should they decide they no longer wish to receive them. In that respect, the opt-out notice is not only necessary but essential to further the governmental interest in protecting consumer from unwanted fax ads.

33. Finally, we deny the request of those petitioners seeking a declaratory ruling that fax ads that "comply substantially" with section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) do not violate any regulation promulgated under the Act, even if the opt-out notice included on the fax does not conform with all of the specified requirements of that rule.¹¹⁰ The Commission has not applied a substantial compliance standard to ¹⁰² At the same time, we note that all future waiver requests will be adjudicated on a case-by-case basis and do not prejudice the outcome of future waiver requests in this Order.

¹⁰³ See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4).

¹⁰⁴ The record indicates that whether some of the petitioners had acquired prior express permission of the recipient remains a source of dispute between the parties. See, e.g., Letter from Brian J. Wanca, Counsel for Anderson & Wanca, to Marlene H. Dortch, FCC, filed in CG Docket No. 05-338 (dated June 23, 2014) at 2 (alleging that he "has obtained evidence contradicting the implication that Stericycle obtained permission before sending its faxes").

¹⁰⁵ See Staples Petition at 8-15; Cannon Petition at 8-9; see also Anda Application for Review at 12 (alleging First Amendment implications).

¹⁰⁶ See supra paras. 16-20.

¹⁰⁷ Although Staples continues to seek repeal of the rule, we note that Staples confirms that a "blanket, retroactive waiver for solicited faxes would provide Staples and Quill (and other defendants in TCPA class actions where the plaintiffs received such faxes) with all the relief they need...". See Staples Comments at 8. As discussed above, such a retroactive waiver has been granted for the petitioners herein, and can be requested by other, similarly situated entities.

¹⁰⁹ See supra para. 4.

section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv). To the contrary, in enforcement actions, the Commission has proceeded under the understanding that full compliance is required.¹¹¹ Consequently, we find no uncertainty or controversy in need of resolution with respect to whether ‘substantial compliance’ with section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) is sufficient to comply with that rule. Moreover, to the extent that accepting this “substantial compliance” argument would result in a different legal standard being applied to determine compliance, petitioners essentially argue that the Commission should have adopted a different rule. As such, this argument could be viewed as another attempt to collaterally challenge the rule as adopted that, as noted above, should have been presented in a timely petition for reconsideration.

IV. ORDERING CLAUSES

34. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED, pursuant to sections 1-4, 227, and 405 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, 47 U.S.C. §§ 151-154, 227, 405, and sections 1.2, 1.3, 1.115, 1.401, and 64.1200 of the Commission’s rules, 47 C.F.R. §§ 1.2, 1.3, 1.115, 1.401, 64.1200, that the Application for Review filed by Anda, Inc. in CG Docket No. 05-338 on May 14, 2012, IS DENIED to the extent discussed herein.

35. STATEMENT OF
COMMISSIONER AJIT PAI
CONCURRING IN PART AND DISSENTING IN PART

Re: Rules and Regulations Implementing the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991, CG Docket No. 02-278; Junk Fax Prevention Action of 2005, CG Docket No. 05-338; Application for Review filed by Anda, Inc.; Petitions for Declaratory Ruling, Waiver, and/or Rulemaking Regarding the Commission's Opt-Out Requirement for Faxes Sent with the Recipient's Prior Express Permission.

What information must a solicited fax advertisement contain to be lawful? The Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) gives one answer; our rules give another. Unsurprisingly, these divergent answers have sparked vigorous disputes in the courts and in our own halls.

I concur with my colleagues that strict enforcement of our rules in these circumstances would contravene the public interest. But I cannot support either the Commission's attempt to retroactively justify our rules as comporting with the TCPA or its attempt to evade judicial review by claiming that no controversy exists. My position is simple. To the extent that our rules require solicited fax advertisements to contain a detailed opt-out notice, our regulations are unlawful. And to the extent that they purport to expose businesses to billions of dollars in liability for failing to provide detailed opt-out notices on messages that their customers have specifically asked to receive, they depart from common sense. Therefore, I concur in part and dissent in part.

I.

Two separate provisions of the TCPA—sections 227(b) and (d)—set forth the information that fax advertisements must contain to be lawful. Accordingly, I will begin “where all such inquiries must begin: with the language of the statute itself.”¹

Section 227(d) sets forth a general requirement that fax advertisements must contain sender-identification information. Specifically, each fax advertisement must “clearly mark[], in a margin at the top or bottom . . . on the first page of the transmission, the date and time it is sent and an identification of the business . . . sending the message and the telephone number of the sending machine or of such business.”² For twenty years, Congress has required manufacturers to design fax machines to facilitate compliance with this law.³

Section 227(b), in contrast, lays out a much more detailed opt-out notice. That notice (1) must be “clear and conspicuous” and “on the first page of the unsolicited advertisement,” (2) must state that the recipient may opt out from “future unsolicited advertisements,” (3) must note that a failure by the “sender of the unsolicited advertisement” to comply with an opt-out request is unlawful, (4) must include a domestic contact number and fax number for the recipient to send an opt-out request, (5) must include a cost-free mechanism to send an opt-out request “to the sender of the unsolicited advertisement,” (6) must instruct the recipient that a “request not to send future unsolicited advertisements” is valid only if sent to the “number of the sender of such an unsolicited advertisement” identified in the notice, identifies the opt-out number, and thereafter the recipient does not expressly invite fax advertisements, and (7) must also comply “with the requirements of subsection (d).”⁴

⁴ 47 U.S.C. § 227(b)(2)(D)–(E).

Sections 227(b) and 227(d) also differ in their coverage. Section 227(d) applies broadly to “any message [sent] via a telephone facsimile machine.”⁵ In contrast, section 227(b) applies only to a more limited set of messages: “unsolicited advertisement[s],”⁶ i.e., fax advertisements “transmitted to any person without that person’s prior express invitation or permission, in writing or otherwise.”⁷ Indeed, the TCPA uses the phrase “unsolicited advertisement” nine separate times in describing the detailed opt-out notice of section 227(b), making clear Congress’s intent that this notice only applied to unsolicited advertisements.⁸

In other words, the text of the TCPA does not require solicited fax advertisements to contain the same detailed opt-out notice required of unsolicited advertisements.⁹

Nor could it be construed otherwise. In the TCPA, Congress confronted the task of “balancing the privacy rights of the individual and the commercial speech rights of the telemarketer.”¹⁰ And when Congress added the detailed opt-out notice provisions to section 227(b) in the Junk Fax Prevention Act of 2005, its focus was balancing the need of “legitimate businesses to do business with their established customers” with the need of “recipients . . . to stop future unwanted faxes sent pursuant to such relationships.”¹¹ As part of those amendments, Congress decided to impose detailed notice requirements on “unsolicited advertisements” but not other fax advertisements. When the legislature passes a statutory scheme that precisely traces a congressional compromise, interpreters must respect the contours of that compact.¹² Indeed, reading section 227(b)’s notice requirements to cover all fax advertisements would effectively read the phrase “unsolicited” out of that subsection.¹³

⁵ 47 U.S.C. § 227(d)(1)(B) (emphasis added).

⁶ 47 U.S.C. § 227(b)(1)(C)(iii) (making it unlawful “to send . . . an unsolicited advertisement, unless . . . the unsolicited advertisement contains a notice meeting the requirements under paragraph (2)(D)”); 47 U.S.C. § 227(b)(2)(D) (“[A] notice contained in an unsolicited advertisement complies with the requirements under this subparagraph only if . . .”).

⁷ 47 U.S.C. § 227(a)(5).

⁹ The commenters vigorously contest the constitutionality of applying section 227(b)’s detailed opt-out notice in addition to the sender-identification notice to solicited faxes. Compare, e.g., Anda Reply at 11 (contending the application would fail the test set forth in Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Serv. Comm’n of NY, 447 U.S. 557 (1980)), with Bellin Comments at 25 (contending the application would pass the test set forth in Zauderer v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel of Supreme Court, 471 U.S. 626 (1985)). We need not resolve the issue, however, because the canon of avoidance counsels that if one interpretation of a statute “would raise a multitude of constitutional problems, the other should prevail.” Clark v. Martinez, 543 U.S. 371, 380–81 (2005). And here, the canon counsels against interpreting the statute to subject voluntary communications to crippling class-action lawsuits if a sender does not strictly comply with a government-mandated detailed disclosure, especially when that disclosure would serve no purpose (such as when a recipient requests, and the sender sends, only a single fax).

Wolverine World Wide, Inc.*, 535 U.S. 81, 93–94 (2002) (explaining that “like any key term in an important piece of legislation, the [statutory provision in question] was the result of compromise between groups with marked but divergent interests in the contested provision” and that “[c]ourts and agencies must respect and give effect to these sorts of compromises”); see also John F. Manning, Second-Generation Textualism, 98 CAL. L. ¹³ Walters v. Metropolitan Educational Enterprises, Inc., 519 U.S. 202, 209 (1997) (“Statutes must be interpreted, if possible, to give each word some operative effect.”).

Moreover, Congress's differentiated treatment of solicited and unsolicited faxes matters because the statute provides different remedies for violations. States and the FCC may pursue civil and enforcement actions against any sender that violates section 227(d)'s sender-identification requirements.¹⁴ And while these remedies extend to section 227(b), that subsection also contains a private right of action against those that send unsolicited advertisements in violation of the law, including sending such an advertisement without a proper opt-out notice.¹⁵

It's not hard to see why Congress treated unsolicited advertisements differently from solicited advertisements. A recipient presumably wants a solicited advertisement; why else would a consumer give his "prior express permission" to a sender? And a recipient may tailor his permission to the circumstances, for example, by giving express consent to receive only a single fax advertisement. In circumstances like those, a detailed opt-out notice would only confuse the recipient—why would he need to opt-out of future faxes if he'd only consented to one? And because section 227(d) already requires a solicited fax to identify the sender's fax number, a recipient has a ready means to contact the sender and revoke his consent.

By contrast, there's no particular reason to think that a recipient wants an unsolicited advertisement, and so he is more likely to want to opt out. Because the recipient hasn't consented, he's had no opportunity to put limits on the fax advertisements he might receive, and he may not even realize that opting out is an option. After all, a recipient may reasonably expect a sender that has solicited his consent to respect its revocation, whereas a recipient may have no such expectation about a sender that hasn't bothered to receive prior permission unless notified otherwise.

So if the statute clearly applies one set of notice requirements to unsolicited advertisements and another to solicited faxes, what are we even doing here? In a feat of administrative bravado, the Commission claims that it can countermand the clear line drawn in section 227(b) under its authority to "prescribe regulations to implement the requirements of" that very same subsection.¹⁶ Indeed, the Commission claims that solicited faxes must contain precisely the same opt-out information as unsolicited faxes and are subject to precisely the same private rights of action absent strict compliance.¹⁷

That cannot be right. Normally the statute directs the agency, not the other way around. Or as the Supreme Court has said, "the language of the statute and not the rules must control."¹⁸ The black-letter law is that an agency has discretion in interpreting a statute only when filling in gaps and clarifying ambiguities; when a statute both asks and answers a particular question, there is no gap to fill, no ambiguity to clarify.¹⁹ Here, the question is which faxes must comply with the detailed opt-out notice of section 227(b) and may be subject to private rights of action. The statute's unambiguous answer: only unsolicited advertisements.

The Commission tries to avoid this answer with a peculiar chain of logic. It seizes on Congress's failure to define "prior express invitation or permission" in section 227(a)(5). It claims that the FCC's own definition of the scope of that phrase leaves open a further gap (i.e., how to determine "whether the sender of a fax advertisement retains the recipient's prior express permission . . . after the initial fax advertisement"). And it asserts that the Commission may fill this agency-created gap through the prophylactic measure of applying section 227(b)'s detailed opt-out notice to solicited faxes because it is good policy.²⁰

These convoluted gymnastics do not work for several reasons. First, the text does not support this approach. Although section 227(b)(2) gives the Commission authority to prescribe rules, that authorization is explicitly limited to implementing "this subsection," i.e., subsection (b). The definitional hook for the Commission's argument, however, lies elsewhere, in subsection (a); and while other provisions of the Communications Act might let us prescribe rules for section 227(a), the Commission rejects that possibility.²¹

Second, the rule does not—and does not even purport to—fill the supposed statutory gap. Although Congress failed to define "prior express invitation or permission" in section 227(a)(5), neither do our rules.²² And while it's not hard to imagine a rule that specifies "whether the sender of a fax advertisement retains the recipient's prior express permission . . . after the initial fax advertisement," that's not what the actual rule does.

Third, the claimed public policy impetus just doesn't exist. Despite suggestions that the lack of a detailed opt-out notice could cost consumers "considerable time and effort" or could "effectively lock in their consent,"²³ that is hardly the case. Recall that all faxes are already required to identify the sender, including the sender's fax number,²⁴ so a recipient will always have a timely, efficient, and direct means to contact the sender to revoke his consent. And while a sender may prefer for that revocation to come through "a contact point designated by the fax sender to process such requests,"²⁵ a sender can hardly complain if a recipient revokes consent via the fax number identified on a solicited fax that doesn't direct a recipient to revoke consent through a particular means.

If anything, good policy counsels against applying a detailed opt-out notice and private right of action to solicited faxes.²⁶ Take the case of attorney Michael Nack. He apparently directed the answering service for his office to provide his fax number and expressly consent to receiving a faxed advertisement from anyone who calls. Douglas Paul Walburg's small business stumbled into the trap, forgetting to include a detailed opt-out notice on the fax Nack's office agreed to receive—and now Nack is the lead plaintiff in a class-action suit seeking damages of up to $48,127,000.²⁷ Subjecting small businesses to crippling suits at the behest of predatory trial lawyers only serves the interests of those self-same lawyers, not the American public.

Fourth, one cannot help but notice that this chain of logic leads back to the very thing Congress decided not to do: apply the reticulated notice of section 227(b) to solicited faxes and expose senders of ²⁰ Anda Order at paras. 19–20.

²¹ Notably, only a violation of rules promulgated under section 227(b)(2) would give recipients a private right of action, which is why Anda only asked that the Commission declare that section 227(b)(2) was not the authority for applying a detailed opt-out notice to solicited faxes.

²² See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(f) (defining 16 separate terms, but not "prior express invitation or permission").

²³ Anda Order at para. 20.

²⁴ 47 U.S.C. § 227(d).

²⁵ Anda Order at para. 20.

²⁷ See Nack v. Walburg, No. 4:10CV00478 AGF, 2011 WL 310249 (E.D. Mo. 2011).

solicited faxes to private rights of action, including class-action lawsuits. “Congress . . . does not alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme in vague terms or ancillary provisions—it does not, one might say, hide elephants in mouseholes.”²⁸

For these reasons, I disagree that section 227(b) authorized the Commission to apply the detailed opt-out notice and the private right of action to solicited faxes.

II.

This extended discussion begs another question: Why are we only now discussing the statutory basis of the Commission’s decision to adopt a rule that applies the detailed opt-out notice and private right of action to solicited faxes? The short answer: We’ve never done it before.

When the Commission supposedly proposed the rule, it did “propose amending the Commission’s rules to comply with the specific notice requirements on unsolicited facsimile advertisements,”²⁹ and it sought “comment on the interplay between [the] identification requirement” that section 227(d) requires for “senders of facsimile messages” and “the notice requirement [in section 227(b)(2)] for senders of unsolicited facsimile advertisements.”³⁰ What it did not do, however, was “make explicit that the Commission contemplated an opt-out requirement on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient.”³¹ It accordingly made no attempt to justify such a requirement nor to even hint that one was on the table.³²

The Commission’s explanation when it actually adopted the rule wasn’t any better. In full, it stated: “In addition, entities that send facsimile advertisements to consumers from whom they obtained permission, must include on the advertisements their opt-out notice and contact information to allow consumers to stop unwanted faxes in the future.”³³ Missing from that ipse dixit was any explanation of the statutory basis of the rule or its policy rationale. Indeed, the only citation justifying the Commission’s action came in a rote recitation of 11 separate sections of the Communications Act.³⁴

What is worse, that same Commission order expressly countermanded the decision to apply the detailed opt-out notice and private right of action to solicited faxes. First, the Junk Fax Order stated that “the opt-out notice requirement only applies to communications that constitute unsolicited

advertisements.”³⁵ Next, the Junk Fax Order recognized that the TCPA’s private right of action only reaches “any violation of the TCPA’s prohibitions on . . . unsolicited facsimile advertisements.”³⁶

Perhaps that’s why the rule has caused countless controversies in the courts. Perhaps that’s why the Commission feels it necessary to retroactively justify the rule today. Perhaps that’s why two dozen companies—and counting—have petitioned the Commission for relief. We know that’s part of the reason why every member of the Commission agrees that strict enforcement of the rule would contravene the public interest in these circumstances.

And yet, the Commission nevertheless claims that these circumstances “present no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove.”³⁷ Given our forthright acknowledgement that the rule should be waived because of how it was adopted, I do not see how there can be no controversy regarding its adoption. And because our refusal to recognize the controversy that is staring us in the face is nothing more than a litigation strategy, I cannot support it.

Nor can I support the Commission’s other attempts to evade judicial review. Anda’s petition cannot be time-barred,³⁸ for example, because our rules do not set a limit on when parties may file petitions for declaratory ruling. Although Anda could have filed a petition for reconsideration, it chose instead to ask which of the 11 statutory provisions identified in the Junk Fax Order was the actual statutory basis of the rule. That’s not a question of reconsideration; it’s instead a classic question of clarification.

The argument that Anda could seek judicial review if it had only filed a petition for rulemaking instead rings hollow given that Anda’s compatriots have filed such petitions and the Commission denies them here.³⁹ The same goes for the Commission’s claim that Anda can always seek review if the Commission tries to enforce the rule against it.⁴⁰ After all, the Commission was pivotal in ensuring that the Eighth Circuit would not review the rule when a private litigant sought to enforce it, and now the Commission waives the rule—but only long enough to try to foreclose review while holding out the threat of future enforcement. Due process demands more: If a party must comply with a rule, it must also have some recourse to determine that law’s validity.

Ironically, the Commission now nitpicks the processes Anda used while ignoring the FCC’s troubling process in this same matter. After all, Anda filed its petition for declaratory ruling four years ago, and it is getting a judicially reviewable answer only now. What is normally a matter of course—issuing a public notice to seek comment on a petition—was denied to Anda for more than three years. And the FCC received Anda’s original petition in November 2010 but waited almost a year to post it online and make it available to the public. These are not the actions of an agency with clean hands, and we should not sully Anda just to make ourselves look better.

For all these reasons, I concur in part and dissent in part.

STATEMENT OF
COMMISSIONER MICHAEL O'RIELLY
CONCURRING IN PART AND DISSENTING IN PART

Re: Rules and Regulations Implementing the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991, CG Docket No. 02-278; Junk Fax Prevention Action of 2005, CG Docket No. 05-338; Application for Review filed by Anda, Inc.; Petitions for Declaratory Ruling, Waiver, and/or Rulemaking Regarding the Commission's Opt-Out Requirement for Faxes Sent with the Recipient's Prior Express Permission.

While I concur with the relief provided today, I must dissent from the decision that the Commission has statutory authority to require opt-out notices on fax advertisements sent at a recipient's request (i.e, solicited faxes). In reality, the item before us addresses a technology that is waning in use but still can be important in certain segments of the economy.

In 2006, the Commission adopted a rule requiring fax senders to include opt-out notices on their fax advertisements, even if the recipients consented to receive fax ads from the senders. While some have argued that the rule is a good policy that benefits consumers, it suffers from a fundamental flaw: the FCC lacked authority to adopt it.

Section 227(b)(1)(C) prohibits the sending of unsolicited fax advertisements—ads that are sent “without ... prior express invitation or permission, in writing or otherwise”—except in the context of an established business relationship and subject to certain other requirements, including that such unsolicited ads contain an opt-out notice.¹ Thus, on its face, the provision and the related opt-out notice requirement do not apply to solicited fax advertisements: ads that are sent with prior express invitation or permission.²

The order attempts to shoehorn solicited fax ads into the statute by claiming: that the FCC needed to define the scope of prior express permission; that such permission lasts only until it is revoked; and that there must be a means to revoke it. A hop, a skip, and a jump later, we have an opt-out requirement on solicited faxes. The order notes that an agency is entitled to fill gaps in a statute. But it is not entitled to invent gaps in order to fill them with the agency's own policy goals, no matter how well intentioned.³

If Congress was concerned that consumers that had consented to receive fax ads might change their minds, it could have provided for that in the statute, but it chose not to do so. In fact, I distinctly remember working on this issue while it was being debated in Congress. I raised this precise issue with staff of the sponsor of the Senate bill and the answer was that a future Congress would need to address it, if it chose to do so. The FCC should respect that reality and not substitute its own policy judgment. Tellingly, section 227(b)(2)(E)(iii) contemplates that someone that made a request not to receive any more unsolicited faxes might later give consent to receive them. The fact that Congress provided for a change of heart in that situation but did not address the opposite case helps confirm that Congress did not intend the statute to cover that case.

In addition, even if the Commission had authority to adopt such a requirement, it is impermissibly broad because it captures one-time faxes sent with the recipient's express permission. In those instances, it should be clear that the fax is not an unsolicited advertisement because the recipient consented to Germain*, 503 U.S. 249, 254 (1992) (“In answering this question, we begin with the understanding that Congress ‘says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there.’”); see also Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485 (1917) (citing Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S. 414, 421 (1899)).

receive that very fax. Yet a sender could be subject to real liability if it does not include an opt-out notice. Indeed, this happened in the case of Nack v. Walburg.⁴ Plaintiff Michael Nack filed a complaint against Defendant Douglas Walburg based upon the receipt of one fax advertisement that did not contain opt-out language. It was undisputed that Nack's agent consented to receive the sole fax in question. And the court even noted that the FCC's authority to impose an opt-out notice on solicited faxes was "questionable." But because the court determined it was barred under the Hobbs Act from entertaining a challenge to the requirement itself, it reluctantly "place[d] the parties back before the district court where Walburg faces a class-action complaint seeking millions of dollars even though there is no allegation that he sent a fax to any recipient without the recipient's prior express consent."

The order also notes that a commenter suggested that the Commission may require opt-out notices on solicited faxes as part of its authority to implement the statute's prohibition on future unsolicited advertisements. While the order does not explicitly rely on this argument, it is worth noting that it is also unpersuasive.

The "future unsolicited advertisements" language must be read in the context of the entire provision, which deals exclusively and unambiguously with unsolicited fax ads. That is, section 227(b)(1)(C) contemplates that a person that had received unsolicited fax ads in the past pursuant to an established business relationship may want to stop receiving unsolicited fax ads in the future. So section 227(b)(1)(C)(iii) makes clear that if the person makes a request not to send any more faxes, the sender can no longer rely on the established business relationship exception and will be prohibited from sending future unsolicited advertisements to that person.

This reading is reinforced by language in section 227(b)(2)(E), which details the requirements for the request not to send future unsolicited ads. One of the requirements is that it must be "made to the telephone or facsimile number of the sender of such an unsolicited advertisement". Thus, the future unsolicited ads prohibition applies to senders of prior unsolicited ads – not to senders of prior solicited ads.

Moreover, because the mechanism for making a request not to send future unsolicited ads is perfectly clear, there is nothing further for the Commission to interpret or implement to effectuate that prohibition. There is no ambiguity for the Commission to resolve. And as the Supreme Court recently stated, "[a]n agency has no power to 'tailor' legislation to bureaucratic policy goals by rewriting unambiguous statutory terms."⁵

Although I do not agree that the Commission has authority to impose an opt-out requirement on solicited faxes, I am sympathetic to petitioners that were confused about the Commission's enforcement of an unclear rule. To provide relief to these petitioners, I concur with the decision to grant each petitioner a retroactive waiver of the rule and to provide waiver recipients with a six month window to come into compliance with this requirement. I likewise concur with the Commission's willingness to consider granting relief to other similarly situated parties. At my request, staff has committed to engage in significant outreach to ensure that fax senders, including those that might not normally follow FCC proceedings, will be aware of the opt-out requirement. This outreach will be critical because, now that the Commission has reaffirmed its rule, companies (including small businesses and offices) that do not include opt-out notices on all of their faxes may find themselves subject to costly litigation.

I appreciate the Chairman's staff and the Bureau staff for working with my staff to make the best of a bad situation.

Specifically, we grant waivers to parties similarly-situated to the initial waiver recipients granted relief by the Commission due to uncertainty whether the opt-out notice requirement applies to faxes sent with recipient consent.³ At the same time, we reiterate that the rule remains in full effect as an easy, cost-free means for fax recipients to avoid faxes they previously wanted but no longer wish to receive. In the 2014 Anda Commission Order we clarified the rule and explained the waiver granted therein would not apply to faxes sent more than six months from the release date of the order.⁴ We thus emphasize that the recipients of the waivers granted herein should already be in compliance having benefited from the Commission's previous clarification.

2. We also deny several related requests for declaratory ruling⁵ insofar as they seek a ruling that the Commission lacked the statutory authority to require opt-out information on fax ads sent with a consumer's prior express permission, or, alternatively, that section 227(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (the Act), was not the statutory basis of that requirement. The Commission has previously denied substantially similar requests.⁶ Finally, we deny the petition for declaratory ruling and/or waiver filed by Bijora, Inc.,⁷ seeking a clarification that fax and text message ads sent with the prior express consent of the recipient do not require an opt-out notice.

A. Telephone Consumer Protection Act

3. In 1991, Congress enacted the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA).⁸ In relevant part, the TCPA prohibits the use of any telephone facsimile (fax) machine, computer, or other device to Ryerson & Son, Inc. for Retroactive Waiver of 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv)*, CG Docket Nos. 02-278, 05-338 (filed June 4, 2015) (Ryerson Petition); Petition of Reliant Services Group, LLC d/b/a Reliant Funding for Retroactive Waiver of 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv), CG Docket Nos. 02-278, 05-338 (filed June 16, 2015) (Reliant Petition) (collectively Petitioners).

³ The petitioners do not seek a waiver of a similar requirement that they include an opt-out notice on fax ads sent pursuant to an established business relationship as there is no confusion regarding the applicability of this requirement to such faxes. See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iii). We also note that this waiver does not affect the prohibition against sending unsolicited fax ads, which has remained in effect since its original effective date. See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4).

send an “unsolicited advertisement” to a telephone fax machine.⁹ In 1992, the Commission adopted rules implementing the TCPA, including restrictions on the transmission of unsolicited fax ads by fax machines.¹⁰

4. In 2005, Congress enacted the Junk Fax Prevention Act, which amended the fax advertising provisions of the TCPA.¹¹ Among other things, the law: (1) codified an established business relationship (EBR) exemption to the prohibition on sending unsolicited fax ads;¹² (2) provided a definition of EBR to be used in the context of unsolicited fax ads;¹³ (3) required the sender of an unsolicited fax ad to provide specified notice and contact information on the fax that allows recipients to “opt out” of any future fax transmissions from the sender;¹⁴ and (4) specified the circumstances under which a request to “opt out” complies with the Act.¹⁵ In 2006, the Commission adopted the Junk Fax Order amending the rules concerning fax transmissions as required by the Junk Fax Prevention Act and addressing certain issues raised in petitions for reconsideration concerning the Commission’s fax advertising rules.¹⁶ As part of that Order, the Commission adopted a rule that required that a fax advertisement “sent to a recipient that has provided prior express invitation or permission to the sender must include an opt-out notice.”¹⁷ A summary of the Junk Fax Order was published in the Federal Register on May 3, 2006.¹⁸

B. The Anda Proceeding

5. In 2010, Anda, Inc. (Anda) sought a declaratory ruling on the opt-out rule as applied to fax ads sent with recipient consent. Specifically, Anda asked the Commission to find that: (1) it lacked any authority to adopt a rule requiring an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the recipient consent; or (2)

in the alternative, section 227(b) of the Act is not the statutory basis for the rule.¹⁹ In 2012, the Bureau dismissed Anda's petition²⁰ finding that the Commission had the authority to adopt the rule and section 227(b) (part of the TCPA) was in fact part of that authority.²¹ The Bureau also found that the Commission had clearly set forth the rule's requirement and found no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove.²²

6. Anda sought Commission review of the Bureau decision, reiterating its earlier arguments that the Commission lacked authority to adopt the rule or, alternatively, that the TCPA was not the basis for the rule.²³ After Anda filed its Application for Review, a number of parties filed petitions seeking various forms of relief. In general, these petitioners contended that there is controversy and uncertainty over the scope of and statutory basis for the rule and that the Commission offered confusing and conflicting statements regarding the applicability of the rule to solicited faxes.²⁴

7. On October 30, 2014, the Commission denied Anda's Application for Review, affirming that the Commission's rules require opt-out notices to appear on all fax ads, and granting limited retroactive waivers to petitioners.²⁵ Specifically, the Commission found that the record indicated that a footnote contained in the Junk Fax Order caused confusion regarding the applicability of the opt-out notice requirement to faxes sent to recipients who provided prior express permission.²⁶ As a result, the Commission found that good cause existed to grant limited retroactive waivers to those petitioners who sent fax ads to recipients who had provided prior express consent to receive them.²⁷ The Commission emphasized that full compliance with the rule would be required within six months from the release of the Order (i.e., April 30, 2015).²⁸ The Commission stated that similarly situated parties could seek similar waivers.²⁹

C. Petitions for Retroactive Waiver of 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv)

8. Since the release of the 2014 Anda Commission Order, additional petitions³⁰ have been filed seeking waiver of the rule.³¹ In general, these petitioners contend they are similarly situated to the petitioners who received a waiver in the 2014 Anda Commission Order.³² Specifically, they assert that there was confusion caused by the seemingly contradictory statements contained in a footnote in the Junk Fax Order and the rule³³ and, as a result, they sent faxes without compliant opt-out provisions to recipients who had previously provided permission or consent to receive them.³⁴

³⁰ 117 petitions for waiver were filed through June 23, 2015. Additional petitions raising similar issues have since been filed and will be addressed separately.

9. The Commission sought comment on the petitions.³⁵ Individual and corporate consumers filed comments opposing the petitions.³⁶ Opponents of the petitions generally argue that the current petitioners are not similarly situated to the initial waiver recipients because: (1) they have not and/or cannot establish that they received the prior express permission or consent of fax recipients prior to sending fax advertisements,³⁷ and/or (2) they do not specifically assert that they were, in fact, confused³⁸ or that the source of their purported confusion was the two factors outlined in the 2014 Retroactive Waiver Order – inconsistency between a footnote and the rule and lack of adequate notice.³⁹ In addition, several commenters reiterate arguments raised prior to the release of the 2014 Anda Commission Order and argue that the Commission does not have authority to waive its regulations in a private right of action and that doing so violates the separation of powers.⁴⁰ In response to these arguments, commenters reiterate the Commission’s holding that granting the waiver petitions does not imply that faxers received

D. Bijora, Inc. Petition for Declaratory Ruling and/or Waiver

10. On October 7, 2014, Bijora Inc. (Bijora) filed a petition seeking a declaratory ruling that Section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) does not apply to fax or text message ads sent with the recipient's consent or, alternatively, that the TCPA is not the statutory basis for the rule.⁴³ Section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) requires that fax advertisements sent with the recipient's prior express consent must include an opt-out notice with the content specified by the Commission's rule.⁴⁴ Bijora states that it is a defendant in a class action lawsuit in which the plaintiff purportedly asserts that it violated the TCPA by sending text ads without an opt-out notice.⁴⁵ Bijora also requests a retroactive waiver to the extent that the Commission declines to issue the declaratory ruling requested.⁴⁶ The Commission sought comment on the petition.⁴⁷ Two commenters oppose the petition arguing that there is no controversy or uncertainty to resolve as the rule at

III. DISCUSSION

A. Requests for Waiver

11. In this Order, we grant 117 waivers to parties that have demonstrated they are similarly-situated to the faxers granted relief by the Commission in the 2014 Anda Commission Order. Specifically, we find good cause exists to grant individual retroactive waivers of section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) of the Commission's rules to the extent described below. We emphasize that these waivers provide relief through April 30, 2015. Any non-compliant faxes (i.e., faxes that do not include the required opt-out information) sent after that date are subject to Commission enforcement and TCPA liability. We also clarify the fax opt-out notification requirement does not apply to text messages.

12. We reiterate that the Commission's previous conclusion that requests seeking a declaratory ruling that the Commission lacked the statutory authority to require opt-out information on fax ads sent with recipient consent, or, alternatively, that section 227 of the Act was not the statutory basis of that requirement, present no controversy to terminate or uncertainty to remove.⁴⁹ We also reiterate the Commission's previous conclusion that it had authority to adopt the rule in question.⁵⁰

13. We find that good cause exists to grant a retroactive waiver to the petitioners.⁵¹ For the reasons discussed below, we believe the public interest is better served by granting a limited retroactive waiver. At the outset, we dismiss arguments that by granting waivers while litigation is pending violates the separation of powers as several commenter have suggested.⁵² As the Commission has previously noted, by addressing requests for declaratory ruling and/or waiver, we are interpreting a statute, the TCPA, over which Congress provided the Commission authority as the expert agency.⁵³ Likewise, the mere fact that the TCPA allows for private rights of action to enforce rule violations⁵⁴ does not undercut our authority, as the expert agency, to define the scope of when and how our rules apply.⁵⁵

14. The Commission may waive any of its rules for good cause shown.⁵⁶ A waiver may be granted if: (1) special circumstances warrant a deviation from the general rule and (2) the waiver would better serve the public interest than would application of the rule.⁵⁷ The Commission previously found that special circumstances warranted deviation from the general rule at issue. Specifically, the Commission found two reasons for confusion or misplaced confidence among affected parties that the opt-out notice rule did not apply to fax ads sent with recipient consent: (1) inconsistency between a Junk Fax Order footnote and the rule, and (2) the notice provided prior to the rule did not make explicit that the Commission contemplated an opt-out requirement on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient.⁵⁸ We find that the petitioners here have adequately demonstrated that they are similarly situated⁵⁹ to the initial waiver recipients and are deserving of a limited retroactive waiver for those fax ads sent prior to April 30, 2015, with recipients' prior express consent or permission.

15. As commenters observe,⁶⁰ the Commission has established that petitioners referencing the confusion between the footnote and the rule are entitled to a presumption of confusion or misplaced confidence.⁶¹ We find that the 117 petitioners satisfy the 2014 Anda Commission Order's test for waiver by referencing the confusing language in the Commission's fax opt-out decision, and that no record evidence rebuts the resulting presumption of confusion or misplaced confidence.

16. All 117 petitions reference the contradictory language in the Commission's fax opt-out decision, thus qualifying them for the presumption of confusion or misplaced confidence articulated by the Commission. Of these 117, 44 are not opposed by commenters. Of those remaining 73 petitions, oppositions generally argue that petitioners are not similarly-situated to the prior waiver recipients. More specifically, the oppositions fall into several categories: petitioners did not actually get consent;⁶² petitioners had actual knowledge of the requirement as evidenced, e.g., by the opt-out notices that did include on their faxes or lawsuits against them alleging violation of the rule;⁶³ petitioners have not argued actual confusion;⁶⁴ and, petitioners face insufficient liability for TCPA violations to qualify for a waiver.⁶⁵ We address each argument in turn and find that none merit denying the requested waivers.

⁵⁹ See e.g., supra at n.35. In so doing, petitioners assert that there was industry-wide confusion resulting from the Junk Fax Order footnote and the rule. See supra at n. 36. In addition, petitioners allege that the faxes at issue were sent with the prior express consent or permission of the recipients. See supra at n. 37.

⁶⁰ See, e.g., Endo Reply Comments at 5-6.

⁶¹ 2014 Anda Commission Order, 29 FCC Rcd at 14009-10, paras. 24-26.

17. First, we decline to conduct a factual analysis to determine whether the petitioners actually obtained consent. Instead, our findings here is that – assuming that proper consent was obtained – petitioners qualify for limited retroactive waivers if they did not include the requisite opt-out notice. We reiterate the Commission’s statement that the granting of a waiver does not confirm or deny whether the petitioners had the prior express permission of the recipients to send the faxes.⁶⁶ That remains a question for triers of fact in the private litigation.

18. Second, we reject arguments that petitioners who included limited opt-out notices on faxes and were sued for rule violations must have clearly understood the requirement and thus do not deserve the presumption of confusion or misplaced confidence. Commenters argue that the inclusion of an opt-out notice demonstrates the respective petitioner’s knowledge of the rule’s requirement.⁶⁷ They allege that these petitioners were aware of the requirement (as demonstrated by the inclusion of opt-out language) and, therefore, they are not similarly situated to the waiver recipients who did not include opt-out language (because they were confused about the necessity of including opt-out notices in solicited fax advertisements). These commenters fail to acknowledge that businesses may well include basic opt-out information, including a phone or fax number, as a matter of good business practice rather than knowledge of the rule.⁶⁸ Indeed, a business that understood the rule would have presumably included all elements of the required notice, not just a few. Likewise, we find that having been sued for non-compliance does not rebut the presumption unlike, e.g., a judicial finding.

⁶⁸ See, e.g., First Index Reply Comments at 3-4, 5 (the business decision to include opt-out language in faxes does not demonstrate understanding of the requirement of its scope).

19. Third, we reject arguments that the Commission made actual, specific claims of confusion a requirement to obtain the waiver.⁶⁹ As described above, the Commission found that petitioners who referenced the confusing, contradictory language at issue are entitled to a presumption of confusion. The Commission did not require petitioners to plead specific, detailed grounds for individual confusion and we cannot impose those here. Finally, we reject arguments – somewhat in tension with the opposition argument addressed above – that petitioners who do not face significant potential liability for violations of the opt-out notice requirement do not qualify for a waiver. In the 2014 Anda Commission Order, the Commission did not require that faxers currently face lawsuits or potential liability to qualify for the waiver.

20. We observe that a few of the petitions resolved by this Order were filed in May and June of this year, after the six- month (April 30, 2015) date referenced in the 2014 Anda Commission Order.⁷⁰ We examined these petitions, as we did each petition filed, independently. These petitions sought waiver for faxes sent prior to the April 30, 2015 deadline imposed by the 2014 Anda Commission Order. As such, granting waivers to these parties does not contradict the purpose or intent of the initial waiver order as the parties involved are similarly situated to the initial waiver recipients.

21. We emphasize that full compliance with the requirement to provide an opt-out notice on fax ads sent with the prior express permission of the recipient is expected now that any potential for confusion on this point has been addressed and interested parties have been given additional notice of this requirement. We reiterate that the waiver granted herein applies only to the petitioners insofar as they may have failed to comply with section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) prior to April 30, 2015. As a result, the waiver granted herein shall not apply to such conduct occurring after April 30, 2015, nor shall it apply to any situation other than where the fax sender had obtained the prior express invitation or permission of the recipient to receive the fax advertisement. We also emphasize that this waiver does not affect the prohibition against sending unsolicited fax ads, which has remained in effect since its original effective date.⁷¹ Nor should the granting of such waivers be construed in any way to confirm or deny whether these petitioners, in fact, had the prior express permission of the recipients to be sent the faxes at issue in the private rights of action.⁷²

B. Bijora, Inc. Petition for Declaratory Ruling and/or Waiver

22. We deny the request of Bijora, Inc. seeking a declaratory ruling clarifying that text messages do not require opt-out notices pursuant to section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) on the grounds that there is no controversy or uncertainty in the rule with respect to text messages. We note that the plain language of ⁷⁰ See 2014 Anda Commission Order, 29 FCC Rcd at 14011-12, para. 30 (“we expect parties making similar waiver requests to make every effort to file within six months of release of this Order”).

⁷¹ See 47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4).

⁷² The record indicates that whether some of the petitioners had acquired prior express permission of the recipient remains a source of dispute between the parties.

that rule applies only to fax advertisements and makes no reference to text messages. As a result, we find no basis for any uncertainty on this point.

23. Consequently, we also deny the request of Bijora, Inc. seeking a retroactive waiver of section 64.1200(a)(4)(iv) with respect to any text message sent with the prior express consent of a recipient because that rule section is not applicable to text messages. In addition, the 2014 Anda Commission Order invited similarly situated parties to file petitions for waiver with the Commission. Insofar as it sent text messages and not solicited fax advertisements, Bijora, Inc. is not similarly situated to the petitioners identified in that order. As such, a waiver is not warranted in this instance.
